SOMERVILLE DOGS HUNTED BY POLICE

People in the Spring Hill District
Terrorized by Savage Canines.

The Somerville police are searching that city for two dogs which have terrorized the fashionable Spring Hill section in that city, and on Wednesday attacked Miss Manola Nyman, a telephone operator, who resides at No. 218 Summer street.

Although the dogs were much in evidence around Spring Hill, and each a menace that parents were afraid to let their children play out of doors, no one has been found who could tell who owned them.

Miss Nyman's adventure around the neighborhood and set the police on a hunt which is still in progress. It is believed by the police that the owner of the dogs is keeping them in hiding.

On Spring Hill they saw some men in the district have armed themselves after being snarled or snapped at by the dogs. These children have been threatened, would like to know that the danger to little ones has permanently ceased.

Miss Nyman was on Lowell street near the Somerville Hospital on Wednesday morning when the dogs attacked her. One sprang at her from each side. Her screams brought to her assistance a man who was passing and he drove the animals away. But Miss Nyman was not rescued without thoroughly frightened, nor before her clothing had been torn. She was not bitten, however.

The police have since been hunting for the dogs.

WOMAN SWOONS AT DOG'S FUNERAL

Pays Honors to Her Pet at Elaborate Funeral in Lot at New Bedford.

NEW BEDFORD, Jan. 2.—Mrs. M. Lucille Brown is today heart-broken over the death of her thoroughbred Mexican pointer, Dallas, who was buried with honors. The little animal had always been a pet. He was given the same treatment during life that a child would have received.

After the body had been interred in the family lot of Dr. Daniel C. Ashby, formerly a city official, the dog's remains were placed in a casket and the funeral was held in the lot.

The burial of little Dallas was an impressive ceremony. A small crowd of mourners accompanied the body to the cemetery. A grave had been dug by the sexton. The body was laid in an expensive wooden casket with a plate inscribed. After the grave had been filled, Mrs. Brown placed a wreath of purple and white immortelles at the head of the grave. The wreath bore the words, "Our Dallas."

Fitchburg Pulpit for Dr. Anderson

Rev. Asker Anderson, D. D., of Boston, for many years secretary of the Congressional National Council at No. 12 Broadway street, has accepted the charge of the Calvinistic Congregational Church, Fitchburg, succeeding Rev. Thomas Chalmers, who has taken the position of superintendent of schools in that city.

BRIDE OF BARON'S SON WAS LUCKY

Cabaret Set Surprised at Marriage of Alfred von der Ropp, Jr., and "Bobby" Fisher.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 2.—Miss Fisher, whose costume among the merry-makers of the New Haven cabaret and club frequents the "Bobby" is the luckiest girl in town, according to the result of the set blue has married Alfred von der Ropp, Jr., son of Baron Alfred von der Ropp, the "Baron King."

The bride, whose eastern business headquarters is at No. 157 Broadway, New York, has offices in Kansas City and San Francisco and is now in New France, where he is a director of the Pacific Lumber Co.

The bride was educated in Germany, but entered Yale three years ago and was graduated from the law school in June last. She has been attached to Miss Fisher. This led him into trouble, for the young lady, an attractive blonde, was recently on the recommendation of her father before the city of New Haven, who had been visiting with her for weeks, accompanied her to court.

She was accompanied by her college faculty and is immediately shortly for the argument that the couple were married.

Young von der Ropp has gone to Leeds, where his bride says she will join him on his graduation in June. He is now on the Yale football crew two seasons ago and on the victory night that won Princeton a year ago. He did not make the varsity eight for Harvard race last year because of a scholarship complication.

Three Days—A Much Swifter Romance Than Elinor Glynn's Three Weeks

One of the Many Portraits of Dorothy Dunn Carr Painted by Mr. Flagg. This One Was the Artist's Gift to Her, and Is Now Published for the First Time.

only at her music and nursed secret ambitions of becoming a grand opera star.

Mr. Carr, the clean-cut, broad-shouldered hero of this swiftest of romances, is a graduate of Harvard, class of '91. He is a mining engineer, and is rated as one of the big men in that profession—just how big you can gather from the fact that his personal interest in the wonderful Broad Pass gold mines, in Alaska, is valued at $1,000,000.

He had been in New York two weeks, immersed in business cares, before his path and pretty Miss Dunn's crossed. One evening a friend of his invited him to dine at the Strazgiere's Club.

The club is a favorite resort for the inner circle of New York's real Bohemia. It is on Forty-ninth street—but don't bother to make a note of the address, for, unless you enjoy the close friendship of some one high in the world of art, you will never get inside its doors. Mr. Carr did, only because his friend was a millionaire who had bought enough pictures from members of the club to pay the organization's expenses for at least a lifetime.

The Strazgiere's Club is a joyous, care-free place—a place that bubbles over with wit and wine, brains and beauty, life and laughter. There the men whose pictures delight us rather when it grows too dark to work at their easels, and they bring with them, as their guests, the prettiest models this side of Paris, with here and there a wealthy patron of their art, such as Mr. Carr's friend.

Miss Dorothy Dunn was one of a merry party who were dining there the evening Mr. Carr and his friend arrived. She and the rest of the party were all friends of Mr. Carr's friend, and they gave him a jovial greeting. But, of all the pretty women and distinguished men gathered around that table, Mr. Carr saw only the radiant beauty of Miss Dunn as she raised her glass in smiling salutation.

"Who is she?" whispered Mr. Carr as he and his friend took seats at a neighboring table.

"I never supposed you thought of anything but mines," was the laughing reply. "Which 'she' do you mean?"

"The one with the glorious eyes. It seems to me I must have seen them somewhere before."

Very probably, his friend replied. That young woman is Miss Dorothy Dunn, and there is perhaps no woman living whose eyes our best artists are fonder of painting than hers."

You MUST introduce me," said Mr. Carr. And Mr. Carr's friend did.

The following morning Miss Dunn surprised all her friends by telephoning them of her engagement. The very next day she and Mr. Carr were married at the Broadway Tabernacle. And that is how a chance meeting at the gay Strazgiere's Club led to a far swifter romance than "Three Weeks."

Charles Mr. Flagg and other famous artists out of their favorite model, and even for this millionaire a charming wife.

DOROTHY DUNN CARR

THE record for swiftness set by the hero and heroine of Elinor Glynn's "Three Weeks" has been broken, not by the creators of other novella's inspiration, but by a real flesh-and-blood American millionaire and by an equally genuine New York artist's model.

Within three days after Henry Clay Carr first looked into the liquid eyes of Miss Dorothy Dunn his heart and hers, until then, entire strangers, were throbbing in as perfect union as two hearts ever can. This, as even a poor mathematician will readily see, was a far speedier romance than that which made Mrs. Glynn's story famous.

But it is only in the rapidity with which their romance progressed that there is any comparison between Miss Dunn and Mr. Carr and the famous characters of "Three Weeks." The charming young woman whom many of America's greatest artists were proud to have as a model is now the wife of Mr. Carr, and together they are speeding westward on a honeymoon which will include a visit to Mr. Carr's immensely rich gold mines in Alaska.

How they came to meet, and fall in love, and become engaged, and be married in such an incredibly short time is only one more proof that real life is filled with more surprises than were ever bound between the covers of all the novels.

The Miss Dunn who is now Mrs. Carr is only twenty-one years old. To say how long ago she first came to New York would be to make you think that she must have been left an orphan, or disowned by a pair of rich but stupid parents, as the heroines of melodrama frequently are. But such is far from the case. Her father is a wealthy lumberman of St. Paul, a member of the Minnesota State Senate for the past twenty-two years; and she came to New York, with his full knowledge and consent, to cultivate what good judges had said was more than ordinary ability as a singer.

This judgment of the West received quick confirmation in the East, and it was not long before Miss Dunn's sweet voice, aided and abetted by a wonderfully attractive face and figure, had won her a part in a successful Broadway musical play. It is an open secret in theatrical circles that it was largely Miss Carr's charms which kept this production in New York far longer than would otherwise have been the case. Eventually, however, even her alluring personality proved unable to make up for the shortcomings of the play itself, and waning audiences forced the management to send it on the road.

The manager did his best to have Miss Dunn go, too. He offered to increase her salary and to do all sorts of things which would insure her future success on the stage. But she could not see her way clear to interrupt her course of instruction under one of New York's best vocal teachers for the uncertainties of a road tour which might even include two weeks of one-night stands in Kansas. So she remained in New York and began posing as an artist's model whenever she had any time to spare from the practicing of her scales.

James Montgomery Flagg was the first artist for whom she posed. His studies of her were so successful that soon her services were in demand from Howard Chandler Christy, Philip Bailew and other masters of the brush and pen. Presently her girlhood friends in St. Paul were able to say:

"Of course you know Dorothy Dunn. Why, you can hardly pick up a magazine without finding her face on the cover." This was the state of affairs when Henry Clay Carr arrived in New York from Alaska one day last November. She had more opportunities for posing than she could possibly fill. And when she wasn't in a studio she worked assiduously

Figure 1 consists of 12 subplots arranged in a 4x3 grid, labeled (a) through (l). Each subplot shows a 3D visualization of a wave function or probability density in a coordinate system with axes x, y, and z. The subplots are organized into four rows and three columns. The first row (a, b, c) shows the initial state. The second row (d, e, f) shows the state after a short time interval. The third row (g, h, i) shows the state after a longer time interval. The fourth row (j, k, l) shows the state after a very long time interval. The wave functions exhibit complex, oscillatory behavior, with the probability density spreading and evolving over time. The axes are labeled with numerical values, and the wave functions are represented by colored surfaces or volumes.

The Duke made quite a fuss about it, until the situation had been explained to him, when he lectured to the board on the importance of the report that the two people who had been arrested were not the same as the two who had been arrested in the past. He then said that the two people who had been arrested in the past were not the same as the two who had been arrested in the past.

Science Explains the My

The Recent Discovery of the Lofty Antarctic Section of the Earth Sagged Downward South Pole and a Corresponding D And Into This Sunken Area Po

By Prof. Garrett P. Serviss

DURING the recent meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science a significant remark was made by the president of the botanical section, which suggests a new theory of the cause and origin of Noah's Flood. The remark, which had no intentional connection with the theory referred to, was simply to the effect that the present distribution of organisms on the earth seems to be best interpreted by the assumption of a North Polar origin.

The theory assumes that hitherto a great mistake has been made in supposing that the deluge mentioned in the Bible occurred in any of the now inhabited parts of the earth, or within the period of recorded history. The Biblical story and its predecessor, the Babylonian story, of a great flood overwhelming mankind are assumed to represent a tradition, which has dimly floated in human memory for innumerable generations, concerning a catastrophe that occurred when mankind occupied a part of the globe from which they have since been excluded by natural conditions.

The site of this catastrophe was the region of the North Pole!

One of the greatest surprises resulting from the Arctic explorations of Nanzen was the fact, which he first fully established, that the site of the Pole and most of the space within the Arctic Circle are occupied by a deep oceanic basin. At the same time the lands now existing around the shores of the Arctic Ocean exhibit unmistakable indications of having been at some former epoch the abode of an abundant animal and vegetable life, whose relics are now all buried in the earth.

On this matter we have so good an authority as Professor Charles G. Abbot, director of the Smithsonian Observatory, who says:

"There are certain circumstances of geology which may indicate a diminished radiation of the sun in ancient times. Although palms used to flourish in the Arctic zones, it does not appear that the tropics were then much hotter, if any, than now. As Manson insists, this uniformity of climate from the Poles to the Equator seems hard to reconcile with the present zonal distribution of vegetation, if the sun were then, as now, the principal source of heat and its effects then, as now, zonally distributed.

"On the other hand, there is accumulating evidence that glaciation has occurred more than once over great regions of the tropics, and most notably in the Permo-Carboniferous period. In that remote period, far antedating the so-called 'glacial' or 'Pleistocene' period, of comparatively recent times, glaciation prevailed in Australia, southern Africa, Hindustan, and perhaps in other tropical regions.

Warmth at the Poles and Cold in the Tropics

"We may suppose that the full maintenance of ordinary temperature requires, for example, as it does now, the co-operation of the following factors: (1) the water vapor of the earth's atmosphere, and that a certain amount of the earth's internal sources of heat were to a considerable extent of importance in maintaining its surface temperature. The earlier the period we consider the greater the contribution of the earth's own heat to the maintenance of the requirement of the sun. But we may assume that all three factors, solar radiation, terrestrial conduction and the blanketing effect of the earth's atmosphere, were required to maintain genial temperatures in the Permian period."

The gist of the theory under consideration is that once there was a continent where now the Arctic Ocean rolls, and that this mysterious Polar continent was the earliest home of man, from which he was driven by climatic change, culminating in a sinking of the land and a great invasion of the sea. The memory of this catastrophe, persisting in the form of varying legends among all the descendants of the men who survived it, gave rise to the traditions of a universal deluge, which are found scattered throughout the folk lore of all parts of the Northern Hemisphere.

Let us now see, in a little more detail, by what arguments this theory may be supported.

The great difficulty which science has found in accepting the Bible account of Noah's deluge, even as an exaggerated legend of an actual occurrence, lies in the fact that no parts of the earth which are known to have been inhabited by man within the period covered by the most ancient history, or pre-history, present any indication of having been swept by a universal flood, covering even the mountain tops, like that described in the Hebrew history.

Nothing is gained by pushing back the date of the deluge some thousands, or tens of thousands, of years, because geology shows that no entire continents in the now habitable portions of the globe have been submerged since the earliest date that can be ascribed to the appearance of man. There have been small and very slow subsidences and elevations, but nothing in the nature of a universal flood, or any sudden, all-whirling catastrophe.

An Explanation of the Atlantis Legends

Yet the Bible narrative finds a curious support, not only in the Egyptian records, but in the Grecian legend of the lost Atlantis, which fascinated the great Greek philosopher Plato. The Atlantis story, which came down to Plato's time from a dim antiquity, avers that there was formerly a continent in the Atlantic Ocean which was submerged, with all its inhabitants, who had attained a wonderful degree of civilization and were the greatest people on the earth. It was the belief of Plato that the lost continent occupied the centre of the ocean between Europe, or Africa, and America, although, of course, he knew nothing of America.

This belief has been thought to be justified by recent deep-sea explorations which have disclosed irregularities on the bottom of the Atlantic that might once have been the surface of the sunken continent. There seem to be mountain chains and valleys there, and the peaks of the Azores, the Canaries and the Cape Verde Islands have been regarded as possibly protruding parts of the missing Atlantis.

But here a great difficulty arises. If Atlantis really did sink at the place assigned within so recent a period as that covered by the history of man, there must have been a violent reaction in the earth's crust, and this would have left its marks upon Europe, Africa and America. Giantic tidal waves, tremendous earthquakes, a sudden climatic change and other convulsions would attend so vast a catastrophe as the sinking of a continent. But no indications of such calamitous occurrences are discoverable.

It is true that the latest Ice Age may have come in the days of primitive man, but that is otherwise explainable, while the result of a sudden expansion of the oceanic area would not the cold, but rather to make the climate more

This may have happened at the point where the North Pole—a earth around the equator were covered

The difficulty would be avoided if the continents of Atlantis were supposed to be, not in the Atlantic, directly off the coasts of Europe, Africa, but in the remote northern part of that ocean, within the Arctic Circle. In that location a vast subsidence of land opened without affecting seriously the shores of the continents.

But what could cause so great a change in the shape of a part of the planet's surface? If the area by the deep Arctic Ocean was once dry land, it occurred when it sank a depression of many thousands of feet, or more, in the bottom of the ocean. No ordinary underlying strata could account for so vast a phenomenon.

Among these discoveries one of the strongest is of gravity of the globe is not fixed, but undergoes slight changes of position as a consequence of these changes, the cause of which, known, the earth's axis of rotation wobbles a little revolves like an imperfectly balanced billiard ball. The changes, though quite rapid, are very small, enough to have effects considerable, and measurable, non-nominal observation.

Now, this discovery suggests a possible cause of an ancient Arctic continent and a deluge over human family which had its beginning at the North Pole.

Constant Shifting of the Earth's Centre

How this may be will appear when it is stated Kimura, the Japanese discoverer of the shifting centre of gravity, finds that it moves "up and down, east and west, north and south along the line of the axis. motion is of the slightest, but there may have been very considerable.

The central core of the earth is the densest part. It has been thought that it may be composed almost entirely of heavy metallic substances, mostly iron. Slight vibrations of this dense core would produce a corresponding shift

Bible Story of the Deluge

Genesis, Chapters 6 and 7.

10 And God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth.

11 And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and, behold, I will destroy them with the earth.

12 Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and shalt pitch it within and without with pitch.

13 And, behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven, and every thing that hath life shall die.

14 For with thee will I establish my covenant; and thou shalt come into the ark, thou, and thy sons, and thy wife, and the wives of thy sons with thee.

15 And of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark, to keep them alive with thee; they shall be male and female.

16 Of beasts after their kind, and of cattle after their kind, and of every creeping thing of the earth after his kind, two of every sort shall come unto thee, to keep thee alive.

17 And take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten, and thou shalt gather it to thee; and it shall be for food for thee, and for them.

18 And the flood was forty days upon the earth; and the waters increased, and bare up the ark, and it was lifted up above the earth.

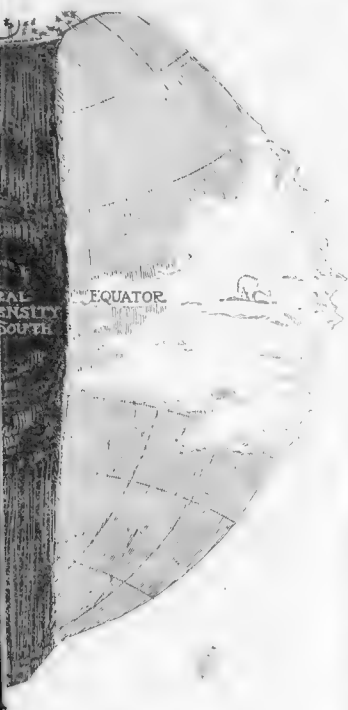

19 And the waters prevailed, and were increased greatly upon the earth; and the ark went upon the face of the waters.

20 And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth; and all the high hills, that were under the whole heaven, were covered.

cording to Kilmura, takes place in a north-and-south direction, and, on the supposition that the motion was formerly far greater than it is to-day, the vibration that remains may be compared to the slight swinging of a pendulum that has been suddenly stopped.

The accompanying diagram shows what might have been the effect of a strong southward movement of the central core.

The depression around the North Pole, produced by the retreat of the underlying support, and the corresponding uplift about the South Pole, would have left the earth's crust at these spots practically as it is to-day.

Answering Hitherto Unanswerable Questions

A weakness of the theory is that it offers no explanation to account for the shifting of the earth's central mass along the line of the axis. But it may be pointed out that the same difficulty applies to the known variation in the location of the centre of gravity. An attempt (which does not appear satisfactory) has been made to explain the latter as due to annual alterations in the amount of snow and ice accumulated round the Poles. But the real cause remains hidden.

On the other hand, the theory, if accepted, would offer a solution of several puzzling questions. In the first place, it would explain the curious fact that one Pole of the earth is depressed deep below sea level while the opposite Pole is elevated so high as to make the Antarctic the loftiest, in mean elevation, of all the contents. It would also throw light upon the origin of the innumerable traditions, found scattered throughout ancient literature, which seem to indicate that mankind had its first home around the North Pole, and was driven southward by some fundamental change affecting its surroundings. And, finally, it would explain the universal prevalence of flood legends, alike in the Eastern and Western worlds, and the absence of any marks of such a disaster in those parts of the earth that have been occupied by man since recorded history began.

How to Be Your Own Dressmaker

First of a Series of Practical Lessons in Home Dressmaking Prepared Especially for This Newspaper by Mrs. Minnie Berry

THE all-important first step for the home dressmaker, a matter of time and patience, is to select a pattern.

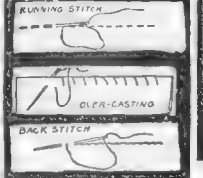

There are many factors to be considered in selecting a pattern. First, the pattern must be suitable for the material to be used. Second, it must be suitable for the figure. Third, it must be suitable for the season. Fourth, it must be suitable for the occasion. Fifth, it must be suitable for the budget.

When selecting a pattern, it is important to read the instructions carefully. These instructions will tell you the size of the pattern, the material to be used, and the steps to be followed in making the garment. It is also important to check the measurements of the pattern against the measurements of the person to be made.

Back stitches take the place of machine sewing. They are formed by making a backward stitch on the wrong side of the fabric.

A slip stitch hem is good for many purposes. It is made by making a series of small, closely spaced stitches along the edge of the fabric.

The running stitch is the simplest of all stitches. It is made by making a series of small, evenly spaced stitches.

The regular basting is used for holding pieces of fabric together before sewing. It is made by making a series of long, straight stitches.

The irregular crosswise basting is used for holding pieces of fabric together before sewing. It is made by making a series of long, straight stitches in a crosswise direction.

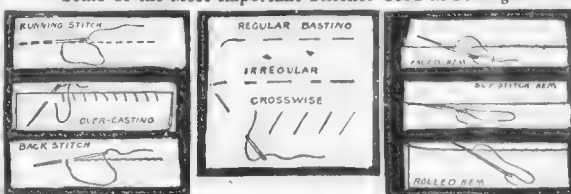

The back stitch is used for making strong, permanent seams. It is made by making a series of small, evenly spaced stitches in a backward direction.

The rolled hem is used for finishing the edges of fabric. It is made by making a series of small, evenly spaced stitches along the edge of the fabric.

The slip stitch hem is used for making a neat, finished hem. It is made by making a series of small, evenly spaced stitches along the edge of the fabric.

Some of the Most Important Stitches Used in Sewing

YOU MIGHT TRY--

For a Cinder in the Eye

Take a small amount of fine sand and mix it with a little oil. Rub this mixture into the eye. It will remove the sand and soothe the eye.

For Machine Grease Stains

Wash the stained area with warm water and a good soap. Then rub the area with a little kerosene. This will remove the grease.

To Clean Jewelry

Soak the jewelry in a solution of warm water and a little ammonia. Then rub the jewelry with a soft cloth. This will clean the jewelry.

For Old Paint Stains

Scrape off the paint with a putty knife. Then wash the area with warm water and a good soap. This will remove the paint.

To Prevent Appendicitis

Keep the bowels regular by eating a diet of fruits and vegetables. This will help prevent appendicitis.

To "Set" the Color

Wash the colored fabric in a solution of warm water and a little vinegar. This will set the color.

A Good Soup Stock

Simmer a mixture of bones, vegetables, and herbs in water for several hours. This will make a good soup stock.

To Clean Leather Furniture

Wash the leather with a solution of warm water and a little vinegar. Then rub the leather with a soft cloth. This will clean the leather.

To Stop Bleeding

Apply a small amount of alum to the bleeding area. This will stop the bleeding.

When grading is incorrectly done the educational equilibrium of the school is disturbed and injustice is done to the earnest and conscientious student. The less serious the students are the more they tend to gravitate toward the teachers that give the higher grades, and the injustice that this tends to work upon the conscientious student when it comes to the awarding of honors and the recommending for positions is obvious. The giving of many high grades, furthermore, gives many students a false and exaggerated notion of their ability.

HAPPY HOOLIGAN

Ring Out, Ye Wedding Bells—That Is, After Happy Gets a "Best Man."

DEBT—Fight It in 1915

DEBT is a relentless, merciless beast, that hunts its victims without stopping all day, and preventing sleep at night. Debt will not let you LIVE in peace.

It humiliates, degrades, discourages and belittles.

Debt will not let you DIE in peace. It hangs like a black cloud above the heads of doctors and nurses, or presses with suffocating weight on your chest, reminding you up to the last minute that you have neglected and betrayed those that you are about to leave helpless.

And with death you do not escape from debt. It blackens your memory, soils your reputation, brings you the contemptuous pity that you hate, and puts an unwelcome burden upon your friends.

Many a man has struggled against debt through a lifetime only to die in the end, killed by debt worries, and fearing debt to say at the very last: "When you are gone I will hunt those that you leave behind you. I will take their house and their living and their happiness and peace of mind and their confidence in you, and your right to expect their respect and affectionate memory."

"You did not pay me in full, but they shall pay in full and more."

If debt, when it first approaches smiling, easy convincing, looked as it does a little later, you would cut off your right hand rather than sign the first note and borrow the first dollar.

But debt is a vice deep and powerful. And, like every vice, its approach is convincing, wheedling and disarming.

The artist tells the story well in this picture—the laughing, little, playful puppy, of whom you have no fear soon grows into the powerful, sharp-toothed beast that hunts.

If you are going through life in debt nobody knows better than you that you might as well travel and compete with a 500-pound sack tied around your neck.

You have seen pictures of miserable criminals in China walking the streets with great heavy blocks of wood fastened round their necks, with holes for their arms to hold them rigid and helpless as they go about.

They are absolutely helpless, for if they fall they cannot rise unless some compassionate being will lift them up. Any man may kick them, insult them, spit at them; they cannot and they dare not strike back, for they are bound, and the slightest push will put them down.

Just so it is with the man in debt. One more push and he falls. If his friends will not pick him up he must stay down.

He cannot assert his rights. He is a debtor, a "slave to the lender." He must take what comes to him, pay higher interest, ask ever more politely. He is not a man; he is a criminal against himself and family, carrying around just such a burden, just such a disadvantage, as that heavy square block that the Chinese law fastens to the crook's neck.

Debt does not mean only what you have borrowed in the past. It means HANDICAP IN THE PRESENT.

You may have the ability, energy and integrity of the man next to you, but he, FREE FROM DEBT, will be chosen before you.

"A good man," your employer says as he looks toward you, consulting your assistant, "but I want a man to be absolutely trusted for this place, and I don't really feel safe with a man I know to be in debt. I know he is honest, in intention. I am sorry for his family, and I know they need what this would mean to him. But my mind must be at rest concerning the man who handles my money. I know what the temptation of debt is, for I went through it. You must recommend some one else."

And though you might feel that you would die rather than take a dollar dishonestly, the chance has passed you and you stand still because MYN DO NOT TRUST A MAN IN DEBT.

You cannot complain. For a man who borrows to-day may die to-morrow.

If he dies the debt is not paid and the creditor is defrauded. You feel your integrity. But the cold business man on whose approval your progress depends sees little difference between you who borrow and say, "Oh, I know I will live and pay it back," and the other man who takes money from the till "just for a few hours" and says, "Oh, I know I will win this time and pay it back."

The man in debt, does not merely destroy the confidence of others in his integrity and good faith.

He brands himself to the world AN INCOMPETENT.

The employer has rejected him for advancement to a place of trust because he may not prove honest, rejects him also for a place in which keen, capable management is needed because he has already proved himself incapable.

Yes, I know, says the employer when advancement is urged, the man is intelligent, honest as the one I shall probably pick out.

"But he is in debt all the time. He is constantly asking for an advance in his salary. I know that the mortgage on his home is bigger than what he bought it."

"His balance is wrong, and his balance when it is wrong."

Here I want judgment and a mind that does not deceive itself. This man is all that you say. I will admit, but he has proved that he cannot manage HIS OWN AFFAIRS. Can't manage his own salary, his own family—a small matter. I am not going to risk giving him the branch and this payroll.

I would like to give the young man a chance. But he must prove that he can manage HIS AFFAIRS before I will let him commence managing MINE. You must recommend somebody else for this advancement."

Again the block of debt fastened around your neck has held you back, and you stand still while another passes you.

The cursed part of debt is the fact that to the man who staggers under the load it represents often not personal selfishness but goodness of heart and generosity.

You have wanted your wife "to look as well as other women," and have some happiness in her youth instead of waiting till she is too old to enjoy what you will give her.

So you have run in debt for her to make her happy, and you have hit upon the one certain plan for making her permanently unhappy. She must share your anxiety, evil moods and the humiliations common to the wife of a man in debt.

Or your load of debt represents affection for your children.

If they do not go NOW to the best school, the fashionable school, and make the acquaintances that will help them all through life, they can NEVER go.

If they are not as well dressed, as much indulged, as thoroughly spoiled as the rich man's children, you feel that you are neglecting their happiness. And you say to yourself: Better risk a little now, go into debt for their sake, since it is only drawing upon the future, only spending for them now the money I am going to have. I must make them happy while they are young and can really be happy. I am willing to carry the load if their life is gay."

And you have hit upon the sure method of making them unhappy, spoiling them with that which you must take away when the inevitable day of reckoning comes and raking that security through childhood in case of your death which you owe to them FIRST AND ABOVE ALL.

Keep out of debt if you are free. For the deep breath that you can draw, and the straight look that you can turn on any man, and the fact that the dollar in your hand is YOURS, are worth more than all the phantom convenience and fictitious "seizing of opportunity" that borrowing could give you.

Are you in the easy stage of debt, the pleasant stage, much loved at home for your generosity, much liked by your friends for your liberality, heartily welcomed by the merchants who know well that the man beginning debt is the freest spender and best customer, and "perfectly good for the present"?

If you are in that easy, pleasant stage, drifting toward the end like a man in sleep, WAKE UP and get out of debt.

Struggle back to the solid ground of independence while yet you may.

Every disgraced, discredited, bleary-eyed, pitiable bankrupt failure began where you are now. Now YOU CAN GET FREE, like the man who has taken his first few doses of morphine. Late only heaven's mercy and a most violent effort of the will can save you. And they may fail—they do usually.

Are you one of the unhappy million, one of those spirits struggling in the hell of debt that is like Dante's Tier of the Inferno, where men struggled and rolled in pitch, occasionally thrust-

Many things we wish our readers for this year just begun.

We wish them strength of will, good purposes in which to use the will.

We wish you 365 good days. Every one can be better than any before it if you do the very best. For the very best means a step upward, however little the step.

We wish you happiness in your work, in your family, in your friends, a peaceful heart to enjoy the beauty of this wonderful earth, and success in your efforts.

We thank you for the loyalty to us in the year that has just ended, and hope we shall share with you in the effort to do better through the year that begins.

For our first Sunday Editorial in this year we have taken this disagreeable subject of debt because it is an American curse.

You that are mercifully free should give this editorial to someone who needs it.

Give it to some young man or woman joyously starting down the hill.

Or give it to some miserable soul at the bottom. He may thank you, and we shall thank you.

the women who figure in the divorce courts as co-respondents, or whose affinities are, comparatively speaking, by way of scandal, have drifted into the commonplace situation through a lack of common sense. They have listened to the platitudes of the "love" columnists, who have allowed themselves to enjoy attentions which flattered their vanity, and they have gradually been led in to compromising situations. While they look at a common-sense view of the subject from the start. There is always an hour when a woman knows that a man has really loved her, and when she knows that to encourage him to proceed, means the changing of the friend into the lover, and when she knows that the future will be a hell.

But it is only the exceptional woman who will face such a situation with direct common sense, and refuse to do anything but allow herself to be deceived, as to the ultimate goal if she does not change her route.

The lack of common-sense reasoning that many women to the unhappy position of a neglected wife.

Love and loyalty, even when accompanied by common sense and economy, often fail to render a man happy in his domestic life. There is a special lack of tact or a superabundance of nerves in his human nature, which makes common sense reasoning which causes a woman always to want to talk or to be talked to when the man wants to read or rest. It is the woman who is in a mood in to stay at home; to want to stay to stay when he shows a desire to go out; to become hysterical or to become cold, to irritate the woman; to be disorderly in her habits, or to carry order to the extent of eliminating comfort from the home, and to desire to change her position, rather when he objects to any of these small but irritating peculiarities. The misdeeds of a man in the conjugal relation are usually large, and cut off from the household, and all the world, and are the result of undeveloped moral qualities. The misdeeds of women are usually directly connected with the life in the air and destroy comfort, and they are the result of a lack of common sense reasoning. Let us have a school for the cultivation of common sense.

But right: the confusion arises from the fact that we make each new "day" in the middle of the night or at the end of the day. Unfortunately has two different significations, both of which in common use.

For instance, during the period of twenty-four hours which the earth takes in making a single turn on its axis. This ought to be of only one meaning: and it is the popular meaning. But it is also used in another sense, and also a second meaning in popular language, viz., the period of daylight, or that during which the sun shines, or the time between sunrise and sunset. In this sense day is contrasted with night, the latter being the period of darkness between sunset and sunrise.

Thus, "the day" which the sun takes in doing the same thing is not visible.

Unlike "day," the term "night" has but a single significance, and it denotes an indivisible period, because the sun does not rise that the first half of every night belongs to one day and the last half to the next day. We need not be told when we speak, for the instance of the night between the 25th and 26th of July.

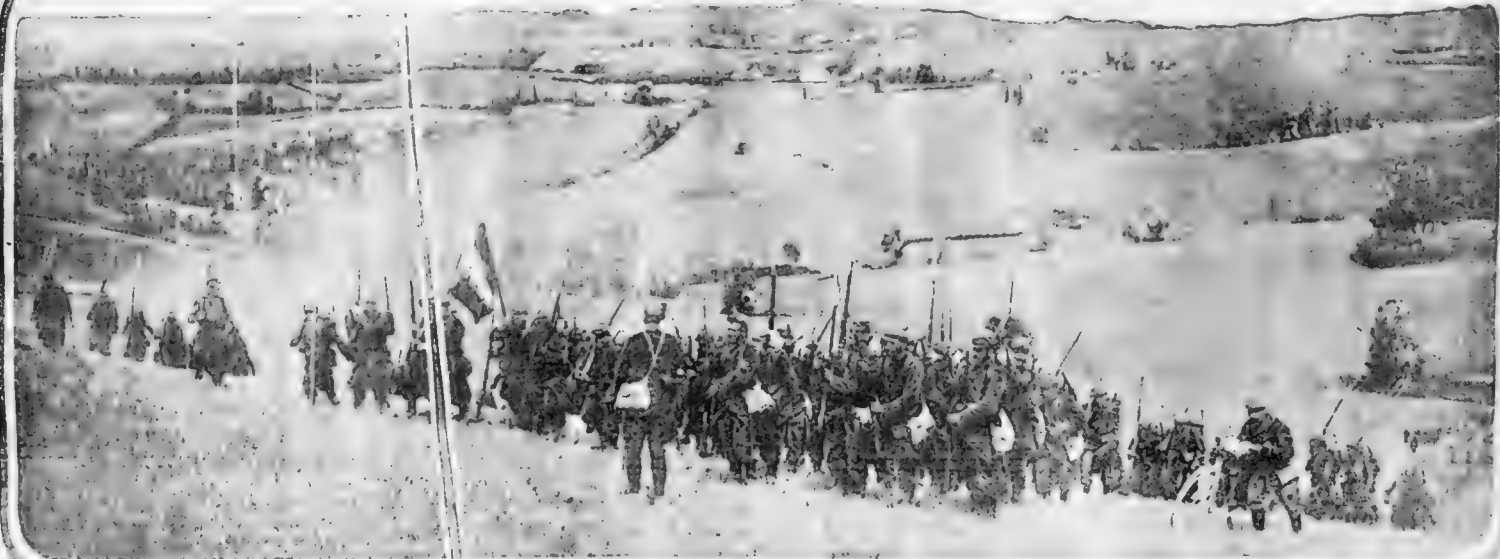

In the astronomical system, however, no question of this kind arises, because the day or the night begins the day at noon, and the night at midnight, and is divided between two days. On the contrary, the middle of the night coincides with the middle of the astronomical day, which is arbitrary.

There are few questions that have exercised the human brain more than the question of perpetual time and its division.

The trouble was that, the earth being round, and the sun being where day absolutely begins, and more than there is a point of day, and the sun is not at the end of its turn on its axis from west to east the sun appears to advance in the sky, and the day is not over, always appearing first in the east, and the sun is not at the end of its turn on its axis in absolute time.

In a free society, it is the right of every man to be free of the control of his neighbors, and he is not to be forced to do anything that he does not want to do. But the right of one man to be free of the control of his neighbors is not absolute. It is limited by the rights of other men. If one man's exercise of his right infringes on the rights of another man, then the first man's exercise of his right is not a right at all. It is a mere privilege. And a privilege can be taken away at any time. So, if one man's exercise of his right infringes on the rights of another man, then the first man's exercise of his right is not a right at all. It is a mere privilege. And a privilege can be taken away at any time. As to America, she represents more than anything else the future. No one is to think of this land as will pass over to the victors. We are great powers and we can upon this earth may it not be the wisest and the best, could it all be our ornaments?

The places where this earth is made beautiful by the efforts of centuries, by the happy results of the good will, the patience and the genius of a race, are not very numerous. This corner of Flanders, over which hovers its fate, is one of those consecrated places. If it were to perish, those who are to be born and who will perhaps some day be happy, would miss memories and examples which nothing could replace.

It is not surprising that the law and order movement is a reflection of the deep-seated fear of crime and violence that is rampant in the United States. It is not surprising, either, that if this fear is not addressed, the law and order movement will continue to grow, and the United States will continue to be a land of fear and violence.

And I mean the ruler of that universe? ' ' ' ' a plural existence to suppose that nature knows who made what it finds we do not care to say. We exist here are not out long, only a few thousand years, so to speak on this plane. What was in before that? How did the universe get on before there was any man? No, we are but in process of evolution. We have arrived on this planet by evolution. That is all right.

What a scientific thinking development unfolds here is a bit surprising. A character like an accident investigator, who is subject to a process of scientific development, is often latent in the scientific and social sciences. For the process has been described in accordance with the system of law and other which science investigates.

And all that scientific men say about it in the positive direction is enough. They investigate material things. I myself have been an investigating material thing. We all investigate material things. We find out certain things about them, but presently we get used to these material things that it seems to us, mistakenly, that there is nothing else in

The first step is to identify the variables that are likely to be correlated. In this case, the variables are the number of hours worked per week and the number of hours spent on household chores. The second step is to calculate the correlation coefficient, which is a measure of the strength and direction of the relationship between the two variables. The third step is to interpret the results, which in this case show a positive correlation between the two variables.

When Beauty Was Clad in Cotton

WHAT THE CAMERA CAUGHT AT SLATER COSTUME BALL.

Miss Elizabeth W. Thomas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Thomas of No. 201 Commonwealth avenue, in the typical dress and veil of the Turkish harem, with Edward Post of Harvard. Miss Bay Slater, at right, in gown of the colonial period and Anne M. Fisher Slater in costume of the fete.

FANTASTIC COSTUMES AT MRS. SLATER'S NOVEL FETE

Back Bay Mansion Bedecked With Cotton Puffs and Vines as Young People Made Merry.

There has been a good deal of "cotton chatter" up and down the Back Bay of late. Not only the "cotton" but the "chatter" has been the talk of the town. It is a fact that the Slater costume ball, which was held at the Back Bay mansion of Mrs. Slater, was a most successful and enjoyable affair. The costumes were of the most fantastic and novel kind, and the young people who attended were most merry and happy. The Slater mansion was bedecked with cotton puffs and vines, and the atmosphere was most festive. The Slater family, including Miss Elizabeth W. Thomas, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Thomas of No. 201 Commonwealth avenue, and Miss Bay Slater, were the guests of honor. The Slater family is well known in the Back Bay, and the Slater mansion is one of the most beautiful and comfortable homes in the city. The Slater family has been in the Back Bay for many years, and their home is one of the most popular places to visit. The Slater family is well known for their hospitality and their love of the arts and sciences. Annual Guest Day of Maine Daughters

A reception and annual guest dinner will be held tomorrow afternoon at the Daughters of Maine home, 100 Commercial street.

Dr. C. W. Leach, Portland, will be the guest speaker. The program will be given by the Daughters of Maine.

The Daughters of Maine will be the guests of the Daughters of the United States at the annual convention, which will be held at the Hotel New Hampshire, Boston, from June 1 to June 10.

[illegible]

Miss Alice Shearer, the youngest daughter of William L. Shearer, will be married to W. F. Richardson on Wednesday evening, at her father's home, 47 Broadway.

Miss Josephine L. Leary, the daughter of Teacher Leary, and Captain Leary, of the North Shore, were brides at the wedding of the Rev. John A. The Corset in a Transition State Still Favors Natural Lines

There Is Rumor of the Nipped-In Waist, but It Is Delayed for Another Season, for Which Women Return Thanks

Brassiere of Delicate Beauty

Winter Coat for Small Tots.

Winter Coat for Small Tots.

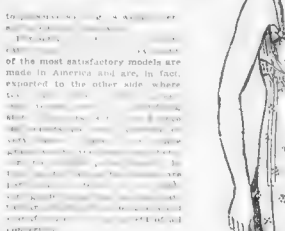

It is a curious thing, but the fact is that the corset has been in a transition state for some time. The fashion of the nipped-in waist, which has been so popular for so long, is now being delayed for another season. This is due to the fact that the corset is now being made in a way that is more comfortable and more natural to the body. The new corset is made of a material that is more elastic and more comfortable than the old one. It is also made in a way that is more natural to the body, so that it does not pinch or squeeze. This is a great improvement over the old corset, and it is one that women are sure to appreciate. The new corset is also made in a way that is more decorative. It has a more attractive design, and it is made of a material that is more beautiful than the old one. This is a great improvement over the old corset, and it is one that women are sure to appreciate.

AMERICAN and French corsets are the two most popular styles. The American corset is made of a material that is more elastic and more comfortable than the French corset. It is also made in a way that is more natural to the body, so that it does not pinch or squeeze. This is a great improvement over the French corset, and it is one that women are sure to appreciate. The French corset is made of a material that is more decorative and more beautiful than the American corset. It is also made in a way that is more natural to the body, so that it does not pinch or squeeze. The 1-looked-for corset is here!

It is especially for—

1. Women who want a supple corset that is durable and gives ample physical support, but is not too heavy.
2. Women to whom low-top corsets have brought rolls of fat above the waist, and who now long to regain a symmetrical figure.
3. Women who think Nemo Corsets are "too heavy."
4. Women who imagine that the usual EXTERNAL Self-Reducing Straps add bulk to the figure—which of course, is not true.

Everything you read here today you can see in fascinating Pathe Motion Pictures at the Motion Picture Theatres this week. Next Sunday another chapter of "The Exploits of Elaine" and new Pathe reads.

Synopsis of Previous Chapter.

THE New York police are mystified by a series of murders of prominent men. The principal clue to the murderer is the warning letter which is sent the victims, signed with a "clutching hand." The latest victim of the mysterious assassin is Taylor Dodge, the insurance president. His daughter, Elaine, Craig Kennedy, the famous scientific detective, to try to unravel the mystery. What Kennedy accomplishes is told by his friend Jameton, a newspaper man.

KENNEDY had thrown himself wholeheartedly into the solution of the mysterious murder case. Far into the night after the exchange of the first message, he remained at work, and at last, at a quarter of one, he came to a decision. He had obtained from other cases, and now added the strange succession of events that surrounded the tragedy we had just witnessed.

We stepped around at the Dodge house the next morning. Early though it was, we found Elaine at the table, but no Harry Bennett. As we were about to leave, we saw the mystery of the Clutching Hand.

There was nothing there, Bennett was away as usual.

I could not help feeling that he was gazing down at Elaine a bit more tenderly than he had done before.

Nothing—yet," he answered shaking his head, but conveying a quiet idea of confidence in his tone.

Just then Jennings, the butler, entered, bringing the morning papers. Elaine opened the door and we stepped in. On the next page was the story I had told you so long ago in the hope of catching a last city edition.

We all bent over and Craig read aloud:

CLUTCHING HAND STILL AT LARGE

New York's Master Criminal Remains Undetected—Perpetrates
New Daring Murder and Robbery of Millionaire Dodge.

He had scarcely finished reading the brief but alarming news story that followed and laid the paper on the desk when a stone came smashing through the window from the street.

Startled, we all jumped to our feet. Craig hurried to the window. Not a soul was in sight!

He stooped and picked up the stone. To his amazement he found it was a piece of paper. Quickly he turned and looked at Elaine. "What is it?" he asked.

Later I recalled that there seemed to be a slight noise downstairs, as if at that moment some one had entered the room.

In point of fact, one who had been outside at the time might actually have seen a sinister face at that cellar window, but to us upstairs it was invisible. The face was that of the servant, Michael.

When Michael entered the room, he passed Elaine, and as he did so, he put his hat on the floor. Elaine, I remember, felt a slight chill.

At that moment, I felt as if I had been struck by a lightning bolt. I had been told that the "clutching hand" was a warning letter.

A Dramatic Moment in the Search for the "Clutching Hand."

This is from the Moving Picture Film of "The Exploits of Elaine," by the Famous Pathe Players

"Here's that Dr. Reinstrom, Thompson, about whom my friend in Germany wrote the other day," I remarked, nodding to the attendant to admit Dr. Reinstrom.

I might explain that while I was abroad some time ago I made a particular study of the "Duermerschlaf"—otherwise, the sleeping sickness—treatment where it was applied at other places in Germany where the subject had attracted great attention. I was much impressed and had imported the treatment to Hill Street.

While we waited I reached into my desk and drew out the letter to which I referred, which ended, I recall

As Dr. Reinstrom is an American he will probably call on you. I am sure you will be glad to know him.

"With kindest regards I am

"Fraternally yours,

"EMIL SCHWARTZ, M. D.,
"Director, Leipzig Institute of Medicine."

"Most happy to meet you, Dr. Reinstrom," I greeted the new arrival, as he entered our office.

For several minutes we sat and chatted of things medical here and abroad.

"What is it, Doctor?" I asked finally, "that interests you most in America?"

"He replied quickly with an expressive gesture, 'It is the broadmindedness with which you adopt the best from all over the world, regardless of prejudice. For instance, I am very much interested in the new 'twilight sleep.' Of course, you have borrowed it largely from us, but it interests me to see whether you have modified it with practice. In fact, I have come to the Hillside Sanatorium particularly to see it used. Perhaps we may learn something from you."

It was most gracious, and both Dr. Thompson and myself were charmed by our visitor. I reached over and touched a call button and our head nurse entered from a rear room.

"Are there any operations going on now?" I asked.

"She looked mechanically at her watch. 'Yes, there are two cases, now, I think,' she answered.

"Would you like to follow our technique?" I asked, turning to Dr. Reinstrom.

"I should be delighted," he answered.

A moment later we passed down the corridor of the sanatorium, still chatting. At the door of a ward I spoke to the attendant, who indicated that a patient was about to be anesthetized, and Dr. Reinstrom and I entered the room.

There, in perfect quiet, which is an essential part of the treatment, were several women patients lying in bed in the ward. Two of the nurses and a doctor were attending to them.

I spoke to the doctor Dr. Holmes, by the way, who bowed politely to me. Dr. Reinstrom then turned to the patient.

"Miss Sears," he asked, "are you feeling all right?" He was very gentle in his manner.

was just starting the treatment. Filling his hypodermic, he selected a spot on the patient's arm.
